Greetings and welcome to the Mental Health Section’s fall newsletter! I hope you’re enjoying this beautiful time of the year. When you get a moment please take a look at the newsletter, which contains several items of interest – including information about the Special Issue of Society and Mental Health, upcoming conferences as well as profiles of graduate students on the market.

Okay, first things first.

The program our Past-Chair Jason Schnittker planned for the Chicago meetings was a great success and the papers presented in the two sessions reflect continued diversity in substantive topics, methodologies and theoretical perspectives in sociological research on mental health.

The work produced by recipients of our section’s two paper awards also reflects the rich diversity in sociological research on the social determinants of mental health. I would like to take this opportunity to once again congratulate Ning Hsieh who received the 2015 Award for the Best Dissertation in Mental Health for her paper, “Social Networks, Social Support, and Mental Health in Cross-National Comparative Perspective.” I look forward to reading Ning’s forthcoming article in the Journal of Health and Social Behavior.

Hats Off to Anna Mueller and Seth Abrutyn – the recipients of this year’s Award for the Best Publication in Mental Health – for their 2015 article, “Suicidal Disclosures among Friends: Using Social Network Data to Understand Suicide Suggestion,” that was published in JHSB. Anna and Seth had a great year and received three other section awards (from Medical Sociology, Sociology of Emotions, and Children and Youth) for papers on this topic that appeared in Sociological Theory and the American Sociological Review. I hope that Ning, Anna and Seth have found a welcoming “home” in our section, and that they become actively involved in it in years to come.

Last but not least, I’m thrilled that David Takeuchi received the 2015 Pearl Award for his lifetime contributions to research and pivotal leadership in the area of immigrant mental health. David’s talk on the history of sociological thinking about immigrant mental health, which is summarized in this newsletter and will be published in Society and Mental Health, was fascinating and I learned a great deal from it.

After our consideration of the abundance of papers we read for the two paper awards – as well as the many strong nominations we received for the Pearl Award – members of this past year’s Awards Committee, chaired by Bruce Link, unanimously agreed that the future of our section is in very good shape. Please start thinking about nominating papers and people for the 2016 awards.
Message from the Chair (continued)

By any measure, I think you would all agree that the memorial for our beloved colleague Len Pearlin was the highlight of the Chicago meetings both for us as individuals and for our section as a collectivity. I personally found the many and varied testimonials inspiring, and am grateful to Carol Anshensel, Bill Avison and Jason for organizing this beautiful event. Having the entire Pearlin Family present for the memorial made it that much more special and heartfelt. I hope that Gerrie and Len’s children and grandson found comfort in the love and admiration we have for him.

With respect to plans for next year’s program, our membership count at the close of 2015 is sufficient to get two section-sponsored sessions for the 2016 meetings in Seattle. Tetyana Pudrovskra (UT-Austin) and Jennifer Caputo (IU) will be organizing paper sessions on Social Relationships and Mental Health and Social Inequalities and Mental Health, respectively.

Elbert Almazan (Central Michigan University) will be organizing the “regular session” on mental health that the ASA offers us each year. Keep in mind that Elbert is able to request additional sessions from ASA if he receives more papers than could fit into a single session. And Cathy Johnson, Chair of the Social Psychology Section of ASA, has kindly agreed to devote one or more roundtables for papers on mental health. I’ll send an email blast with information about submitting your papers for the 2016 ASA meetings when the call comes out in the next month or so.

Since this is my first newsletter, I want to take this opportunity to thank outgoing council members and committee chairs – Alex Bierman, Ellen Granberg, Janet Hankin, Sigrun Olafsdottir and Karen Van Gundy – for their service to the section. I’m grateful to Bill Avison, Mathew Grace, Bruce Link, Elaine Wethington and Eric Wright for continuing on in their respective positions this year. Special thanks go to Richard Adams and Struther Van Horn for their continued work as Newsletter Editors as well as Jason for his leadership as section Chair this past year. Finally, I want to extend a warm welcome to Robyn Lewis Brown, Andre Christie-Mizell and Stephanie Hartwell who cycled into their various positions. I’ll keep Kristi Williams, the Chair-Elect of our section, informed of all developments that emerge this year to insure a smooth transition after next year’s meetings.

One last thing: Although I’m not a race scholar, I want to direct your attention to Ta’Nehisi Coates’ new book Between the World and Me, which provides penetrating insight into the emotional and health consequences of persistent racial prejudice and discrimination in the U.S. Coates, who just received one of the coveted McArthur Genius Awards, has been nominated for the 2016 ASA Award for Excellence in the Reporting of Social Issues.

Well, that’s all the news I have at the moment. I’ll continue sending weekly email blasts with announcements and other relevant information. In the meantime, please send me announcements you would like to share with section members and don’t hesitate to email me suggestions for our section as well as the 2016 program. All my best, Robin Simon

Mental Health Section 2015 Award Winners

Bruce Link, Awards Committee Chair

Leonard I. Pearlin Award for Distinguished Contributions. This Award carries the name of the highly influential and deeply respected mental health sociologist Leonard Pearlin. It goes to a scholar who has made substantial contributions to the sociology of mental health in theory and/or research. In 2015 the award went to David Takeuchi, Boston College. There are so many reasons that David is deserving of this award but prominent among them are the breadth and depth of his scholarship, his outstanding mentoring and his tireless and very effective leadership for the sociology of mental health.

Concerning his scholarship Linda Burton of Duke University put it this way in her letter nominating David, “He tackles the “big-science” socially-relevant research questions concerning understudied and disadvantaged populations. It almost goes without repeating that his work, especially on Asian American and Latino populations, has “gone where no work has gone before,” and that it is broadly accessible to the field with David having produced a plethora of highly-visible, peer-reviewed journal articles and scientific presentations at national and international conferences."

Concerning mentoring scholar after scholar, upon hearing about our choice of David delivered glowing, detailed, and extensive accounts of his capacity to mentor. In fact one of his mentees, a psychologist, traveled from the west coast to Chicago on her own dime to come to a convention of sociologists to hear David’s talk and attend the dinner to honor him.

Concerning his leadership on behalf of the sociology of mental health David has worked tirelessly to keep a keen eye focused on mental health disparities at the NIH and at foundations such as Robert Wood Johnson and Russell Sage. But perhaps David’s most distinctive attribute, one that is beautifully nestled within his outstanding scholarship is his “lovability,” everyone adores this man. It is the first thing that comes out of their mouths when they speak about him. Again Linda Burton captures this perfectly in her nominating letter, “David is beyond humble and almost unilaterally does his incredible good deeds for the discipline behind the scenes. While we are likely to embarrass him a bit if he is selected for this award, let us put him in the spotlight, if only for a moment, for all to see a near-perfect model of an extraordinary scholar and humanitarian who has profoundly influenced the science of the sociology of mental health and also demonstrated the kind of scientist and mentor we all should aspire to be.” Congratulations to David Takeo Takeuchi!

The award for Best Publication. This award is given for the best published article, book or chapter in the area of the sociology of mental health. In 2015, the Award went to Anna Mueller and Seth Abrutyn for their paper “Suicidal disclosures among friends: Using social network data to understand suicide contagion” that was published in the Journal of Health and Social Behavior, 2015, 56: 131-148. We came to this decision after considering literally scores of articles published in the major sociological and psychiatric journals. The paper used data from ADDHEALTH to deepen understanding of suicide contagion. The aspect the committee found especially appealing was the strategic use of information as to whether a suicide attempt had been disclosed to others. When attempts were disclosed to alters (alters were also in the study) emotional distress and suicidality were higher in those alters. But when an attempt was not disclosed alters showed no elevation in such outcomes. It was a beautiful piece of reasoning that cleverly used extant data to reveal a finding of significant sociological importance.

The award for Best Dissertation. The 2015 award went to Ning Hsieh, University of Pennsylvania, for her paper “Economic Security, Social Cohesion, and Depression Disparities in Transitional Societies: A Comparison of Older Adults in China and Russia.” The committee chose it for the clarity of its logic line, the sophistication of the analysis and the importance of its findings. But perhaps most of all the Committee admired it for having tackled a large and important question in a strategic and illuminating way. Committee member Jason Schnittker had to recuse himself from the deliberations concerning the dissertation award as he is Dr. Hsieh’s mentor. We all congratulate Ning for this very propitious start to her career.

Award Photos by Don Lloyd

David Takeuchi, Pearlin Award Winner
My talk to accept the Leonard Pearlin Award at the Business meeting of the Sociology of Mental Health section consisted of two parts. The second part of my talk discussed the substance of my paper, New Wine in Old Bottles: Immigration, Immigrants, and Mental Health, that will appear in the Journal of Health and Social Behavior in late 2016. Immigrants and their health including mental health have been a prominent public policy issue and an enduring research topic. In my talk, I considered some of the major themes that have been used to characterize the mental health of immigrants. For example, at the turn of the 20th century, immigrants were seen as inferior, untrustworthy, unassimilable and consequently more likely to be considered mentally unfit. Fast forward to current research, some immigrant groups are considered a paradox because their generally lower rate of mental health problems (compared to the US born) is not what is commonly expected given their social position in the US. I addressed whether these past paradigms are sufficient for examining mental health issues among immigrants in contemporary society. The rest of the talk was spent rethinking some concepts and applying them to the study mental health among immigrants. For example, I disentangle the structural and cultural facets of acculturation, a concept that is commonly used in research on immigrants and mental health, that may help provide more clarity about how each may be associated with mental health problems.

The first part of my talk was personal and acknowledged the institutions and the people who contributed to my career arc. I could write a book about the many influences on my life and scholarship, but in this space, let me focus on a key institution and a few sociologists. The ASA Minority Fellowship Program was instrumental in my becoming a sociologist. I dropped out of the doctoral program after completing my MA in sociology and spent about 10 years working for non-profit organizations in Hawaii conducting evaluation and needs assessment studies. The MFP provided the validation and opportunity to return and complete my doctoral studies. Without the MFP, I would never have received my Ph.D. Shortly after receiving my Ph.D., Phil Leaf, who was then at Yale, offered me a two-year postdoctoral fellowship in mental health services research. The fellowship was transformative. Not only did I learn more about the sociology of mental health, epidemiology, and services research, but I also met David R. Williams, who has remained a collaborator, confidant and friend. During my last fellowship year, I met Linda Burton, who like David Williams, inspired and supported me through the usual highs and lows of a career. Bernice Pescosolido helped me enter a tenure-track faculty position. She was part of a panel conducting a site visit of a center at UCLA that I was part of. At the time, I was enjoying my position as a researcher at the center in a non-academic position. Bernice, at the site visit, noted to UCLA administrators that it was problematic that I did not have a tenure-track position.
faculty position. Shortly thereafter, I was able to apply for and receive a tenure-track position at UCLA. Bernice has remained an exceptional source of support and ever so quick to respond to my questions and requests. Amy Yamashita, while not a sociologist by training but one in spirit, has been a consistent and patient supporter and mentor. One of her major accomplishments includes helping me learn to write which was not an easy task. As mentioned, I could go on, but I won’t. Suffice it to say, my career journey has been enjoyable not only because of the research I have done, but because of the exceptional scholars that I have had the good fortune to meet and who became dear friends along the way.

Nominations Being Accepted For 2016 Mental Health Section Awards

1) Leonard I. Pearlin Award for Distinguished Contributions
   The ASA Sociology of Mental Health Section solicits nominations for the Leonard I. Pearlin Award for distinguished contributions to the sociological study of mental health. The award honors a scholar who has made substantial contributions in theory and/or research to the sociology of mental health. Thanks to a generous donation from Leonard Pearlin, the section has created this annual award. Section members are encouraged to submit nominations and self-nominations are welcome. Please consider your colleagues whose contributions merit special recognition of their accomplishments. Please send nominations and a CV of the nominee by January 15, 2016 to Bruce Link, Sociology Department, 1206 Watkins Hall, University of California, Riverside, Riverside, CA 92521 or by e-mail to bruce.link@ucr.edu.

2) Award for Best Publication in Mental Health
   The ASA Sociology of Mental Health solicits nominations for the Best Publication Award. This award is given for the best published article, book or chapter in the area of the sociology of mental health. The publication date needs to have been between 2014 and 2016. In addition, the awards committee will conduct a search of published works for candidates for this award. Section members are encouraged to submit nominations. Self-nominations are welcome. Please consider your colleagues whose work merits this recognition. Please send a letter on nomination for the award by April 1, 2016 to Bruce Link, Sociology Department, 1206 Watkins Hall, University of California, Riverside, Riverside, CA 92521 or by e-mail to bruce.link@ucr.edu.

3) Award for Best Dissertation in Mental Health
   The ASA Sociology of Mental Health section solicits nominations for the best doctoral dissertation in the area of the sociology of mental health. The dissertation should have been completed within the academic years of 2014-2015 or 2015-2016. Section Members are encouraged to submit nominations. Self-nominations are also welcome. Please send a letter of nomination and a paper based on the dissertation (Or dissertation synopsis) by April 1, 2016 to Bruce Link, Bruce Link, Sociology Department, 1206 Watkins Hall, University of California, Riverside, Riverside, CA 92521 or by e-mail to bruce.link@ucr.edu.

Mental Health Sessions, 2016 Meetings

Regular Session on Mental Health
Organizer: Elbert Almazan, Central Michigan University, Email: almaz1ep@cmich.edu

The Regular Session on Mental Health is open to any topics in the sociology of mental health. More than one session is possible if there are a large number of submissions.

Mental Health Section Sponsored Sessions:

- Tetyana Pudrovska (University of Texas-Austin) will be organizing a paper session on Social Relationships and Mental Health. Email: tpudrovs@austin.utexas.edu

- Jennifer Caputo, Indiana University, Bloomington will be organizing a paper session on Social Inequalities in Mental Health, Email: jennifericaputo@gmail.com
Graduate and Post-Doctoral Students on the Job Market

Zinobia Bennefield
Texas A&M University
zinobia1@tamu.edu

Zinobia Bennefield is an American Sociological Association Minority Fellowship Program Fellow (cohort 42) with a sponsorship through Sociologists for Women in Society. She is a PhD candidate at Texas A&M University. Her research interests include medical sociology, racial stratification with a focus on race and socioeconomic disparities in mental and physical health, intersectionality, and institutional inequality within the health care system. Zinobia has constructed a research agenda which involves the study of the sociology of health and illness, utilizing a critical race theoretical perspective in health research, and using a mixed methodological approach to create pragmatic suggestions for the eradication of health disparities. In a 2014 Social Science and Medicine article, she used a historical comparative methodological approach to analyze the persistence of institutional racism within the health care system. In a 2015 American Journal of Health Education article, she challenged the notion that education has the same impact on women of different races, and argued that specialized health campaigns geared specifically to the cultural realities of women of color, independent of educational level, are essential in closing health awareness gaps. This article won the Ruth Schaffer Best Paper award from the department of sociology at Texas A&M University. Her dissertation entitled “Multiple Dimensions of Stratification in Adolescent Mental Health: A Moderated Mediation Analysis” utilizes the National Comorbidity Survey Adolescent Supplement to explore the complexities of adolescent mental health and extends the theoretical and methodological literature concerning the relationship between socioeconomic status, race, gender, social support and mental health.

Please Encourage Membership in our Section! Be Sure to Renew YOUR Membership. Remember to recommend our section to graduate students.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Special Issue of Society and Mental Health

Society and Mental Health seeks scholarship on public sector mental health, with a focus on the role of structural and behavioral correlates of mental health disparities and the consequences of social inequality for those systems which meet the needs of individuals with severe mental disorders. Of particular interest is scholarship which explores the role of the Affordable Care Act and Medicaid expansion. Manuscripts which elucidate the unique contributions sociologists can make to mental health services research are also welcome. Articles will be peer reviewed and 4 to 6 papers selected for inclusion in this special issue. The guest editor will provide a brief historic overview of developments in public mental health care. Manuscripts due March 15, 2016; please submit papers using the journal’s on-line submission system.

Call for Papers

The Editors of Psychiatric Rehabilitation Journal are soliciting papers for a special issue that will be devoted to the topic of research on disability policy as it pertains to people with psychiatric disabilities and behavioral health conditions.

This special issue aims to advance the state of knowledge and expertise regarding policies relevant to improving rehabilitation services for and the quality of life of people with psychiatric disabilities and complex, chronic behavioral health conditions.

High quality research is sought on the effects of federal, state, and local government disability and related policies on access to, quality, cost, and utilization of psychiatric rehabilitation services, behavioral health, quality of life, and well-being.
Rigorous research with significant implications for future policy development to better support people with behavioral health challenges is also welcomed.

We are particularly interested in evaluations of large-scale demonstrations at the national, state, and local government levels, studies utilizing data from nationally representative surveys, and rigorous quantitative analyses, although policy analyses and large-scale qualitative studies with clear disability policy implications are also welcomed.

Policies of interest include, but are not limited to, those affecting disability determination, disability benefit application and receipt, employment, income support, housing and homelessness, education, health, child welfare, criminal and juvenile justice, peer support, family and other caretakers, defense personnel, and veterans.

We are interested in how policies directed at broader populations specifically affect people with behavioral health challenges; therefore, although the policies examined or implicated may be more broadly targeted, all papers must specifically include analyses pertaining directly to psychiatric disability and behavioral health conditions.

Guest Editor Crystal R. Blyler, PhD, Senior Researcher, Mathematica Policy Research will oversee the special issue.

All papers will be peer reviewed, and should be submitted through the Manuscript Submission Portal. Please select Special Issue for article “type" when completing your submission.

Submissions should follow the standard guidelines for Psychiatric Rehabilitation Journal.

The deadline for submission of papers is February 1, 2016, with the plan to publish the special issue in 2017.

Post-Doctoral Positions

Postdoctoral research fellowship with slots available. Duke University’s Center for the Study of Aging and Human Development has received continuing funding for its T32 training grant and is soliciting proposals from people interested in completing research on aging at Duke University. This T32 (NIH institutional postdoc grant) is one of the oldest (if not the oldest) in the country, and scholars in the biology, psychology, and sociology of aging have come to Duke to study since the late 1950s.

The Duke Aging Center Postdoc program is grounded in the belief that interdisciplinary research is essential for the fruitful study of aging and human development. A key component of this training process is the weekly RTP seminar which addresses relevant aging issues in multiple disciplines. In addition, the seminar addresses professional issues (such as publication, presentation, job search, tenure, IRB applications) essential to successful performance in academic settings. In addition to attending the seminar, postdocs are expected to attend discipline-specific presentations such as geriatric grand rounds, Duke University Population Research Institute (DuPRI) seminars, research roundtables through the Duke Aging center’s OAIC Pepper Research grant, and other aging-related opportunities as they are available.

We currently have six postdoctoral slots to be filled between September 1, 2015 and August 31, 2016. People with a strong commitment to research on aging, regardless of discipline, are encouraged to apply. Details about the application process are available at http://www.geri.duke.edu/postdoctoral-training. Please contact Professor Deborah T. Gold, Director of the Training Program, for assistance in identifying mentors, selecting recommendation writers, and other programmatic issues. She can be reached at deborah.gold@duke.edu.

Graduate Program

Do you have exceptional undergraduates considering a Ph.D. in Medical Sociology?

University of Alabama-Birmingham Graduate Fellowships

Students applying for the PhD program by December 1 each year will be considered for the UAB Graduate Fellow in the Arts and Sciences award. This prestigious fellowship offers an annual stipend of $32,000 per year, plus tuition and fees, and honors applicants to PhD programs in the UAB College of Arts and Sciences who show exceptional promise in research and scholarship. Awardees will be notified by February 20 each year.

Visit http://www.uab.edu/cas/sociology/

Contact Dr. Patricia Drentea, Director of Graduate Studies pdrentea@uab.edu

Ethics and Research in Mental Health

Client compensation and follow-up: A Comparison of Two Boston Reentry Programs by Lena Campagna and Julianne Siegfriedt

It is no secret that ethics are fundamental to mental health research. The inclusion of client incentives as an exchange for one’s time as an ethical consideration in research design has garnered controversy, particularly when examining validity (Lambert, 2011). While client compensation has generated differing perspectives from an ethical standpoint having to do with valuing a person’s time to being coercive, less research has examined its potential influence on program attrition rates and follow-up. The disparate impact that absence of client incentives can have on attrition rates is clear in two comparative reentry programs providing services to men and women reentering the Boston area with co-occurring disorders. Both programs share the same project timeline and scope, implement similar instrumentation and assessments (e.g. require similar cognitive effort), and have overlapping clinicians and reentry specialists; however, each program has a different funding agency. In this particular situation, one funding agency will not allow the program to provide client incentives of any kind while the other program is able to provide $30 gift card at the 6 month follow-up time. The differences in follow-up and attrition rates between the two programs are marked. The program (Program 1) providing incentives at follow-up has a 78% follow-up rate, while the program with no incentive aside from transportation passes (Program 2) yields a 10% follow-up rate. Poor follow-up rates as illustrated in the case of Program 2, can be detrimental to effective program evaluation and in determining the most optimal service delivery for clients, particularly an already challenging population like those with co-occurring disorders. Clinicians, particularly those in service delivery on both projects have stressed the differences in follow-ups and have attributed the lack of client follow-up to an absence of client incentives. One clinician cited an instance last week where a client due for follow-up did not want to fill out all of the questions “for nothing.” The contrasting follow-up rates supplemented by clinician feedback underscore the importance of considering client compensation in research design in order to produce the most meaningful outcomes from both a research perspective and a client ethics perspective, particularly when the clients involved are likely the most socioeconomically disadvantaged of us all.

References:

About the Authors: Lena Campagna is a third year doctoral student in the Department of Sociology at the University of Massachusetts Boston. She received her Master of Arts degree from the University of Massachusetts Boston in American Studies. Her scholarly interests include Victimology, mental health and American Indian Studies. Her dissertation research focuses on media portrayals and perceptions of American Indian victimhood, particularly American Indians as victims of police brutality.

Julianne Siegfriedt is a third year doctoral student at the University of Massachusetts Boston in the Department of Sociology. She also received her MA in Applied Sociology from the University of Massachusetts Boston. Her scholarly interests include the... intersections of gender, health, power in institutions, and the sex trade. The focus of her dissertation research includes the transition to adulthood of commercially sexually exploited minors and differences in various institutional responses once individuals turn 18.

SECTION OFFICERS FOR 2014-2015
Chair: Robin Simon, Wake Forest University
Chair-Elect: Kristi L. Williams, The Ohio State University
Past Chair: Jason Schnittker, University of Pennsylvania
Secretary-Treasurer: Eric Wright, George State University
Council Member: Robyn Lewis Brown, University of Kentucky
Nominations Committee Chair: William R. Avison, University of Western Ontario
Publications Committee Chair: Andre Christie-Mizell, Vanderbilt University
Awards Committee Chair: Bruce Link
Membership Committee Chair: Stephaine W. Hartwell, University of Massachusetts-Boston
Student Member: Matthew K. Grace, Indiana University, Bloomington
Section Journal Editor: Elaine Wethington, Cornell University

FROM THE NEWSLETTER EDITOR
I continue to remind everyone to please send me information about your activities that you would like to share with section members or information that section members would be interested in knowing. In addition, I am always interested in ideas that you have which will improve either the Section’s newsletter or website. Please put “newsletter” in the title of the email.

Please take moment to look at the MH Section Website. Let me know if there are problems or information that we need to have on it.

Here is a list of other possible contributions for future newsletters:
- Upcoming conferences, calls for papers, grant opportunities or special issues of journals.
- Reviews of conferences
- Newly published books by section members. Please include publication date and publisher information.
- Graduate or post-doctoral students on the market and would like to be profiled. Please send your picture, title of your dissertation, email address, affiliation, and a brief statement of your work (200-300 words).
- Congratulatory information (e.g., promotions, new jobs, awards, honors, grants).
- Short articles on topics that cross boundaries with other sections, such as animal-human interactions and mental health. We ask that you keep submissions brief (no more than 500 words).
- Descriptions of class activities/books/films for use in undergraduate sociology of mental health and illness classes or general tips and strategies for teaching at both the graduate and undergraduate level.

Don’t forget to look at other Associations for conference presentations:
Society for the Study of Social Problems
American Public Health Association

If there are other venues where sociologists can present their work, please let me know and I’ll include them in future newsletters and our website.

Lastly, I would like to thank the contributors to this newsletter. I especially want to thank Lena Campagna and Julianne Siegfriedt for their article and hope that others will send me ones in the future.

Thanks,
Richard Adams
The Journal of the ASA Section on the Sociology of Mental Health

Editor: Elaine Wethington, Cornell University
Past Editor William R. Avison, University of Western Ontario

Editorial Scope of SMH: Society and Mental Health publishes original articles that apply sociological concepts and methods to the understanding of the social origins of mental health and illness, the social consequences for persons with mental illness, and the organization and financing of mental health services and care. Its editorial policy favors manuscripts that advance the sociology of mental health and illness, stimulate further research, inform treatments and policy and reflect the diversity of interests of its readership.

Manuscripts must be submitted electronically at http://mc.manuscriptcentral.com/smh

For more information, contact:
Elaine Wethington, Department of Sociology
G52 MVR
Cornell University
Ithaca, New York 14853-4401
Telephone: (607) 255-2962
e-mail: ew20@cornell.edu